Dell discloses VC fund high on Israeli firms

Computer powerhouse Dell disclosed that its venture capital fund has invested in 70 start-ups, including 15 Israeli companies. The existence of the venture capital fund Dell Technologies Capital was revealed on Sunday. The fund was founded five years ago with the goal of helping early-stage startups, and invests an average of $100 million a year. It specializes in the fields of cyber, big data and communications network management, Dell said. Dell's investments in Israeli startups include open-source database company Redis Labs, virtual container security company Twistlock, server farm security company Guardicore, software library management company JFrog, smart vehicle company Otonomo and flash-based storage company ElastiFile.
